1. Divide the class into groups of 6. ( If the class is not in multiples of 6 – either appoint a 7th person to staple the answers. . . . or give one person an extra sheet – the bright child gets two pages to look for answers)
2. Give each group member a question sheet. (on white paper)
3. Give each person in the group one coloured page of answers. That is to say, each person should have one page of coloured answers – One group should have – a pink, blue, green, yellow, lilac, orange page of answers.
4. The group leader needs to read the first question. All group members need to read the answers on their coloured page – once the answer has been identified. The person needs to cut the strip from the page and staple the strip into a ring.
5. The person holding the first answer reads the second question. All group members need to look for the answer on their sheet. The person having the answer must take the first ringed answer and after cutting the answer from their page – thread their second answer through the first answer to link the answers to make a chain.
6. The person who answered the second question – reads the third question. They should pass the chain with two links to the person having the third answer. The third answer must be linked to the second answer.
7. Continue with the chain.
8. Learners should be encouraged to record key words to answer the all questions on their own page.
9. The answers should form a chain having the letters recorded in order to form the words of the slogan of the French revolution!
